Cliff will be missed by all who knew him. As a husband, he was the loving, responsible provider. As a father, he was the example his children want to follow. As a brother, he was loyal, encouraging and strong. As a friend, he was faithful and was always there in time of need. As a carpenter, he worked tirelessly at his trade, careful to be efficient with his time and fair with his customers. As a pastor, he was the shepherd that loved and cared for his congregation. Cliff gave of himself to others-only eternity will reveal the countless lives he touched. His strength and humility will not be forgotten as he spent his last years on earth facing great adversity but always thinking of others and pointing lives to Calvary.
