“ I only met Paul and Jill about 4 years ago. In every conversation I had with Paul he would speak kindly about Jill which made me understand the love they had for each other. We came to know each other through the BONS bee club. Paul was so generous with giving his talents. Our club website was developed and improved every month because of his passion for making it that way. He never looked for accolades but did express to me this past year about something he had done which would have helped students who may have some interest in honey bees. A young student did search out the information on the website and was able to complete a project for school. Paul was so happy someone had used the information he had provided. He was such a giving person in both his talents and sharing his knowledge on a list of topics. He was the type of person I wish I had known for much longer. I will miss our phone conversations and discussions in the garage. I always learned from him. Paul will be missed and never forgotten.

“ Paul, was my best friend, and he's been my friend for roughly 60 years. Over the last 20 years, sometimes we would talk almost every day. Sure I am biased, because Paul and I have been so close, but I swear to you, Paul was a great great person. Paul has been sickly for quite a while, I used to tease him that he broke the Guinness world book of records, for how many times he had to be rushed to the hospital; and how that he's probably concocted every known ailment to mankind. But somehow, it never got to Paul. Through all his ailments, and even with Jill getting cancer, Paul did more than just survive. He kept that strong wonderful spirit. Paul was maybe one of the most talented man I've ever known. Any time I was getting ready to start a project, I would always call Paul; because he had already done it. He could rebuild the car, remodel house, fix a watch, raise animals, grow anything and everything, the list would go on for pages. He loved his wife Jill and his children, and was dedicated to them. He was an incredibly successful businessman. Best of all, he was the best friend you could ever have. He was always there; giving comfort and advice, when I needed it. I loved him, and I will miss him immensely. But as Jim Morrison said, the great thing about death, is there is no more pain. And as of late Paul has suffered a lot of pain, and I am happy for him that it is gone. I knew when Jill died, Paul was very close behind. We talked about it often. And now, somehow they are still together. Douglas Schulz

“ Few people know that my mom and dad taught karate when I was a child and they both had their black belts! I have fond memories of playing on the mats as they taught karate and then watching them play racquetball at the same gym. My dad loved baseball, music, playing cards and dominoes, and movies! When I was really young, I was in bed and heard music playing upstairs. I tiptoed up the steps to peek through the railing to see where it was coming from and saw my mom and dad dancing...it's one of my happiest memories.

“ I never met him live and in person but am thankful for all the virtual time together and Paul's technology skills giving help assisting beekeeping clubs. He was truly a generous soul.
